

about me

I am a literary comedy ("litcom") author based in Austin, Texas. My debut novel, TOO MUCH HEAVEN, released Nov. 4 from Cackle Books, my comedy imprint. I have written three award-winning comedic short films, one of which played in over 30 festivals worldwide, including the Cannes Short Film Corner. My short story "The Bitches of Eastwick" was featured in the anthology Mixed Bag of Tricks. I am a member of the Writers' League of Texas, the Austin Chapter of Women Who Submit, and a founding member of the Armadillo Authors Society. I have a B.A. in English Literature and Latin from the University of North Texas.

about my book

- Title: Too Much Heaven
- Genre: Upmarket, speculative, humor
- Length: 236 pages

As the Angel of Rain, Petrichor once made oceans. Now, he's a misanthropic mess living in an abandoned pasta factory in San Diego, wearing stolen Hawaiian shirts and criticizing local weather forecasts. All he wants is to be left alone. But squirrels are popping out of trash cans with lectures about his life, his boss Michael is on his case to find a new mission on Earth or else, and the only good human he knows—his bartender, Sam—has a secret identity that could jeopardize both of their lives. There's not enough tequila in the world...

my readers are

- Comp: The Big Lebowski meets Good Omens. Shares similar tone with John Scalzi's Starter Villain.
- Fans of Hollywood "screwball" or quirky/ offbeat comedies, workplace comedies or sitcoms like The Good Place.

themes, tropes

- Reluctant hero / lovable curmudgeon
- Found family and belonging
- How to deal with grief, disillusionment
- Hope

early reviews

"An absolute delight! With sparkling wit and genuine heart, Rowan Floyd made me laugh, made me cry, and left me feeling that humanity might be worth saving after all. I loved every chaotic, tequila-soaked page."
—Kelsey Cox, USA Today bestselling author of Party of Liars and Pretty Dead Things
